The principals of good citizens

- A good citizen knows their place in the world and among other people and understands that living beings are more important than things
- Helps loved ones and strangers and supports the weaker
- Stands up against injustice and violence
- Works and pursues lifelong learning
- Respects their country and its holidays, knows the constitution and legal system and respects the law even in small things
- Is interested in what goes on in the society, is politically aware and active and does not see themselves as insignificant
- Respects human dignity, equality and the right of others to be different
- Cares for the nature, shows consideration for other living beings and the next generations
- Knows history and respects their own culture and that of others
- Is honest, kind, friendly and appreciates good humor

The main areas where volunteers contribute:
